Three Days and Two Nights at Sea in an Open Boat.

PORTLAND, Ore., May 20.—News is received that ten of the crew of the foundered steamer Alaska, have reached shore near the mouth of the Sinclair river in Lane county. They had a severe experience in an open boat since leaving the steamer. The boat came near land at Cape Perpetua, Thursday, but could not make a landing on account of the huge breakers and the rocks. It was decided to try to swim ashore. Eleven started, and all succeeded except one, who was too weak from hunger and exposure and was drowned.

PEACH AND BERRY CROP.

Its Condition and Prospects in Delaware and Maryland.

The best reports come from Western Sussex. In Eastern Sussex and Kent growers report from a light to an average crop in prospect. From Wiconomico and Caroline counties, Maryland, come very favorable reports, while Kent county, Maryland growers do not look for over half a crop of peaches. Pear promise well in a few localities, in others poorly. Berries are likely to yield well everywhere.

Another Race War.

Three Violent Deaths in a Single Day.

RESULT OF A SCHOOL ELECTION.

A Terrible Affair Which Has Wrought Feeling to a High Pitch—Armed Men are Patrolling the Streets to Prevent a Collision—The Coroner Invited to Leave Town or Suffer the Consequences—A New Sheriff Appointed.

FOREST CITY, Ark., May 20.—Our quiet city was horrified at 2:10 o'clock Saturday afternoon by the most horrible tragedy in the history of the county, resulting in the death of three good citizens. For several days past, excitement has been high over the school election, and A. M. Neely and G. W. Ingram, both colored, have been making incendiary speeches, advocating the ousting of the whites from the control of school affairs.

A Disturbing Element.

Neely has been a disturbing element in the politics of this city for some time, having almost absolute control of the colored people. Saturday a large crowd assembled at the junction of Washington and Front streets, in the vicinity of the polls. The exact origin of the trouble cannot, in consequence of the terrible excitement, be ascertained at present. As near as can be learned, it seems that Neely had a fight with a white man, and was knocked down by a bystander.

The Shooting Begins

He then ran to Capt. John Parham for protection. Marshal F. M. Folbre interfered and commanded the peace. Thomas H. Parham, son of John Parham, heard the disturbance and came running down stairs from the county clerk's office, where he is employed as deputy, with a pistol in his hand. He saw the marshal and his father in close proximity to each other, talking excitedly, raised the pistol and fired, the ball striking Folbre in the back of the head. In falling Folbre raised his pistol and fired two shots. Thomas Parham fell mortally wounded and died in a short time, falling to the sidewalk.

A Sheriff Killed.

Sheriff D. M. Wilson came running to the scene, when a stray ball struck him, piercing his heart and killing him instantly. His only words were: "I am a dead man." It is supposed a ball from Neely's pistol killed Sheriff Wilson. Capt. John Parham is thought to be wounded, but refuses to allow the wound to be examined.

Wilson and Parham are what is known as Fusionists.

Thus three of the best men in the county were seen lying murdered upon the street at the same time. The cries of the afflicted families were heartrending, ladies from every portion of the town rushing through the streets searching for husbands or brothers.

The Coroner Invited to Leave.

G. W. Ingram, Coroner of the county, was waited on by the citizens Saturday afternoon and invited to leave town, which he did on the 6 o'clock train. Neely and a few companions are in a building on Washington street, surrounded by armed men.

Town Under Martial Law.

The people are mad with excitement, horror and indignation, and hold Neely responsible for the whole trouble. Every body able to bear arms has been on duty since the trouble, and the town is being patrolled by armed men, under the supervision of Col. V. B. Izard, who was, by wire, appointed sheriff by Governor Eagle. While an attack upon the town may not transpire, yet it is thought best to be prepared. The awful calamity has cast a pall of the deepest gloom over the city.

FIGHTING A MOB.

Two Policemen Get Done Up by a Crowd of Ruffians.

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., May 20.—Police Officers White and Vance attempted to break up a drunken carousal on West street, Florence, about 1 o'clock this morning. They had arrested two men when they were set upon by a crowd of ruffians, who beat and cut the officers unmercifully, White's ear being almost severed from his head.

The officers started for help and were pursued by the mob. Vance and White took refuge in the house of Ralph Bardwell, which was soon surrounded by the roughs who demanded that Bardwell should surrender the officers to them. At Policeman White's request Bardwell loaded his gun with birdshot. White then warned the men to leave, but they responded with a shower of stones. He then fired into the crowd. Patrick Tobin was shot in the abdomen and probably fatally injured. Thomas Anderson and John Alvord were also shot, but are not seriously hurt. The mob then dispersed without further trouble. Officer White is in a critical condition For many months past these toughs have caused disturbances in the street and the officers had determined to break up the gang. They had no weapons, however, except their clubs, and these were taken from them in the fight.

The Tacoma Millionaire's Wife Sues for a Divorce.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 20.—Mrs. Ferry, who caused a scandal in Paris by her arrest at the instance of her husband, a millionaire of Tacoma, Wy. T., has engaged San Francisco lawyers to bring an action for divorce. In Paris, she says, Ferry introduced to her one Leclerq as a man who could speak French and English, and who would take his wife and children around. She claims Ferry soon became jealous of Leclerq. The latter fell ill, and because she went to his lodgings to inquire about his health her husband broke into the lodging house while she was there and ordered the police to arrest her.

The next day his lawyers presented her with a long affidavit, which they asked her to sign, acknowledging that she had been guilty of infidelity. If she signed this, and consented to her husband's divorce, he would give her $10,000 and $50 monthly. She refused.

A singular circumstance, which may have bearing on the divorce proceedings, is the fact that of the three Ferry children, two daughters are foundlings, having been left on the doorsteps of the family residence, and been adopted by the kindhearted millionaire and his wife.

THE boulevard project is deserving of a monument. With the streets paved as they are, the West Park boulevard is really the only pleasure driveway in Marion.

THE Commercial observes that the trees set out in Central park, Cincinnati, this spring are all chestnuts, so we naturally expect no diminution of the chestnut crop in Cincinnati papers.

THE average citizen can prepare himself for the joys or sorrows of a political campaign, for the ball will soon be set rolling. This is an off year in Ohio, so to speak, but a governor and legislature are at stake and there will be a lively campaign.

THERE is a great deal of talk just now about the American sugar beet being the sweetest in the world, but there is no one to dispute the fact that the average dead beat is the most numerous. If the latter were divided into families the newspaper dead beat would probably rank first.

WE do not expect the council in its special session to stop the [illegible] repairing, but we do believe that a halt would be called at the next session if the councilmen would only drive over the various streets and see what an abominable condition they are being put in. Pleasure riding has become intolerable inside the corporation.

A Wonderful Tribe.

A remarkable history is told in a recent issue of The Bulletin de la Société de Géographie, which records M. Camille Douls' recent terrible experience he underwent in a journey in northwestern Africa. Dressed as a native, it appears, he landed on the west coast near Cape Garnet, several hundred miles south of Morocco, pretending to the people of that region that he had been shipwrecked. At first he was roughly dealt with; but finally he gained the confidence of his captors, and, after five months' wanderings, he finally made his way to Morocco. Here his disguise was discovered, and he was thrown into prison, to be released presently at the intercession of the British minister.

The adventurer's record is interesting, as they give a new version of the popular story of the great desert. The Oulad Delim, into whose hands he fell, he says, are unusually intelligent. They speak a pure Arabic, founded upon the constant study of the Koran. They are monogamous, and treat their wives with the greatest affection and respect as equal of the men. The girls share the education of the boys, learning to read and write with them; hence, the women show an intellectual and moral elevation far beyond that of any other Moslem women.—The St. James Gazette.

A Lover's Dream.

A girl at Hackney, aged 19, with her two brothers and a younger sister were left in charge of the house while their parents attended a funeral in the country. In the evening the girl's sweetheart called. As she was alarmed at noises which she fancied she heard he stayed at the house all night to reassure her. During the night he dreamed that he saw the girl walk past him, beckoning him to follow. He awoke, and, becoming alarmed, went into the passage. Having dressed, he went to the door of deceased's room and knocked. Receiving no answer he then awoke the others. On the bedroom door being opened deceased was found lying on the floor, with blood issuing from her mouth. From a doctor's examination it would seem that the girl died at about the time that her sweetheart dreamed she beckoned him. —Pall Mall Gazette.

THE WESTERN MULE.

PECULIARITIES OF THE BURRO USED IN THE MOUNTAINS.

How They Are Broken to Pack Carrying—Strange Infatuation for Horses—Interesting, Amusing and Aggravating Characteristics.

"A man who has roughed it out among the mountains," it was said at a Broadway sales stable the other day, "remembers the mules about as well and as long as anything."

It is just about at this time, the speaker told, when asked why the mind should be particularly impressed by the familiar quadruped, that a good many are rounded up for the summer's work after being turned out all winter. As natural to expect, a mule that has had no restraint for several months is inclined to show the worst side when the hand of a would be master begins to be felt. A drove of 100 or so in a corral fresh from the plains will carry just about as much downright "cussedness" as can be found in any brute collection under the sun. The first thing is to have them shod. Such a thing as one of them consenting to the job is unknown, but frontier blacksmiths have no fear or hesitation, and in a trice the mule is tied up and ironed.

The pack mules are smaller and inferior in every way to the riding mule, except in toughness and rascality. Like Joey Bagstock, the packers are sly. Most of them are sired by Indian ponies and are born on the open plains. A wild horse is gentleness itself beside them, but as they are usually used for carrying packs their wickedness does not so much matter.

PACKING THE "CRITTER."

The first time the pack saddles are put on a young mule the excitement surpasses description. The green beast, strong and wiry, is lassoed and led into a small open space. Before he knows what it is all about a noose of the lariat around his neck is slipped over his nose; this gives him a shock, as it were, and he makes a start for liberty. But the more he pulls the tighter the pinch on his nose, so he finally gives it up and stands still.

More ropes are brought into use, and he is finally brought to have a leather binder put over his eyes. The next step is to put the pack saddle on. The great kicking is done when the crupper is slipped under the tail. Words cannot tell the way that mule's heels flash through the air in all directions. But strategy wins and mules do tire. The pulling up of the "sinch," as the girth is called, brings out a new struggle, but it is soon over and to an extent the mule is conquered.

Mules always like company, and work especially well with a horse. With a horse on the lead they will follow steadily, and keep in the horse's company at night without attempt to wander away. They will even fight among themselves to get near a horse. At night the mules submit without moving a muscle to having the packs removed. A good roll on the grass is the first thing when relieved, and then they go to eating. At any hour of the night, if they are looked at, their noses will be seen on the ground, with their jaws industriously in motion.

"Packing" a saddle is an art in itself. In former years the Mexican sawbuck saddle was used. This invariably cut and chafed the mule's back; but now the California stuffed aparejo is the thing. This is fastened by two men, one on either side, who brace themselves with one foot against the mule's ribs and pull on the lash rope with all their might. The load is balanced properly, and the lash rope twisted and looped in a sort of network. When all is ready for the final tightening the men "give it to her." The poor mule actually groans under the pressure, but even under this tightest of tying the loads quite frequently slip out of place.

A CONTINUAL REVELATION.

The mountain mule is a continual revelation. New phases of character are continually unfolding in the most positive manner. One, for instance, will be amiable and pleasant until led up to be saddled, when all at once he will apparently be possessed of the evil spirit itself. Another will resist all attempts to saddle and pack until the others have been attended to, when he will be as docile as could be wished for. Another, perhaps used for riding, will not let a match be lighted by any one on his back without an outbreak, but will not object to smoking. Some will wade through a stream without hesitation, and another will vigorously object to wetting his feet. When in the water, if one falls down and any water gets into his big ears, he will lie and drown without a struggle. They are very private and particular about their ears, objecting to having them handled.

It is not easy to gain a mule's confidence. They are absurdly timid, and if one of a drove is scared the rest are also panic stricken. An old black log always makes a mule shy. Snakes terrify and bears paralyze them. On the plains no spurring or whipping can drive a mule up to an Indian. Take a number of mules and throw their reins over some of the others' ears and they will stand all day in the belief that they are securely tied.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Forest Restoration.

Systematic planting on a national scale must wait, and will be sure to wait, until the little remnant of our forests shall be administered economically, and at such a profit on costs of exportation as will justify the outlay required to cover costs of replanting, but meantime millions of acres of denuded forest land may be preserved from the destruction of it totally by fire, or its erosion by water, for the trifling cost of collecting and scattering the seed over their surface. The winds and the birds annually redeem thousands of acres in this way, and we need only open our eyes to the importance of their labors to realize how much may be done in the same way by systematic, intelligent effort.—Forest and Stream.

The Blind Men's Cafe.

Some years ago in Paris there was a small restaurant, known as the Blind Men's cafe, much frequented by the blind, where an orchestra of blind musicians performed for the amusement of patrons. One extremely dark night in winter, when a thick fog had fallen upon Paris—so thick that no one could see his way, nor so much as distinguish a street lamp ten feet away, and when policemen, carrying torches, here and there assisted some groping foot passenger to find his course—a gentleman, seeing another man walking along confidently and boldly, ventured to say to him:

"Sir, will you please tell me where you are going?"

"To the Palais Royal," said the gentleman, who was walking with such sure footsteps.

"And how do you find your way so readily?"

"Oh, never mind; I never get lost. Do you wish to follow me?"

"Thank you."

So the first gentleman caught hold of the pocket of the other's overcoat and started after him. Not a thing could be descry, but his companion marched confidently along. At length the two arrived under the familiar arches of the Rue de Rivoli.

"We are safe now," exclaimed the gentleman who had been led; "and may I thank you for giving me the advantage of your wonderful eyesight?"

"Yes, but you must not detain me. Your faltering along the way has already made me a little late for my orchestra."

"What orchestra?"

"The orchestra in the Blind Men's cafe."

The man was perfectly blind. The thick fog was nothing to him, who had walked in darkness all his life, but had, nevertheless, learned his way surely through the great city.—Argonaut.

The Speed of Thought.

It takes about two-fifths of a second to call to mind the country in which a well known town is situated or the language in which a familiar author wrote. We can think of the name of the next month in half the time we need to think of the name of last month. It takes on the average of one-third of a second to add numbers containing one digit and half a second to multiply them. Such experiments give us considerable insight into the mind.

Those used to reckoning can add two to three in less time than others; those familiar with literature can remember more quickly than others that Shakespeare wrote "Hamlet." It takes longer to mention a month when a season has been given than to say to what month a season belongs.

The time taken up in choosing a motion, the "will time," can be measured as well as the time taken up in perceiving. If I do not know which of two colored lights is to be presented, and must lift my right hand if it be red and my left if it be blue, I need about one-thirteenth of a second to initiate the correct motion. I have also been able to register the sound waves made in the air by speaking, and thus have determined that in order to call up the name belonging to a printed word I need about one-ninth of a second, to a letter one-sixth of a second, to a picture one-quarter of a second and to a color one-third of a second.

A letter can be seen more quickly than a word, but we are so used to reading aloud that the process has become quite automatic, and a word can be read with greater ease and in less time than a letter can be named. The same experiments made on other persons give times differing but little from my own. Mental processes, however, take place more slowly in children, in the aged and in the uneducated.—Nineteenth Century.

Plain Words About Peking.

Above all other characteristics, however, of Peking one thing stands out in horrible prominence, and I have put this off to the last. Not to mention it would be to willfully omit the most striking color of the picture. I mean its filth. It is the most horribly and indescribably filthy place that can be imagined. Indeed, imagination must fall far short of the fact. Some of the daily sights of the pedestrian in Peking could not hardly be more than hinted at by one man to another in the smoking room. There is no sewer or cesspool, public or private, but the street; the dog, the pig and the fowl are the scavengers; every now and then you pass a man who goes along, tossing the most loathsome of the refuse into an open work basket on his back; the smells are simply awful; the city is one colossal and uncleansed cloaca. As I have said above, the first of the two moments of delight vouchsafed to every visitor to the Celestial capital is his first sight of it. The second—though I must not omit to thank my too kind host for one of the pleasantest and most instructive fortnights of my life—is when he turns his back, hoping that it may be forever, upon "the body and soul stinking town" (the words are Coleridge's) of Peking.—Pall Mall Gazette.

One Way to Encourage Truth Telling.

Ninety-nine children out of every hundred will tell a falsehood if you speak to them thus: "My son, I do not know whether you did the act with which you are charged or not. I have no means of knowing. I must rely on what you now say. If you say you did not, I will make you a present of a handsome pony, saddle and bridle. If you say that you did the act I will whip you till you can't stand up and put you on bread and water for two days. Now truth is beautiful. Speak the truth!"—Nashville American.

A Story of Von Bulow.

While playing the piano before large audiences he has often suddenly stopped, walked to the front of the stage and made speeches absolutely antithetical to the spirit and opinions of his listeners. On one occasion he suddenly took it into his head that it was positively essential for each individual member of the vast orchestra he was conducting to stand while playing. They had to stand, some of them with heavy instruments, for nearly three hours.

An Unfortunate Experiment.

My attention has only recently been called to the discovery made by a Dr. Motschulkowsky, etc., of Odessa, in the state of Europe, of a new method for treating spinal troubles by means of suspension. Dr. Lewis A. Sayre has also been accredited with the invention of the apparatus by which the patient is so suspended as to straighten and elongate the spine.

I hope it may prove successful, and in the future be so perfected as to afford great relief to those who suffer in this way, but it did not work with us years ago when we tried it on a patient known as Big Nosed George.

B. N. George was a somnambulist, and had been for years—a somnambulist and troubled with color blindness, so that time and again he would be found somewhere wandering around in the night, also en dishabille, riding a pirate horse, when his was a black.

Color blindness and somnambulism got Big Nosed George into several of these scrapes, till at last it occasioned talk, and some people came to speak to him about it. It was then that he got his back up, and in order to reduce this spinal curvature some acquaintances tried this suspension method.

Possibly it was carried to excess, or then again, his overshoes might have been too heavy. Anyhow, when a man went back there a day or two afterwards to ask George if the draught was too strong for him, or if his head seemed to be high enough, he was shocked to find that B. N. George was no more.

People who make scientific experiments that way cannot be too careful. Big Nosed George left a wife and four small children. Also a wife and two still smaller children. He left them about two years before his death.—Bill Nye in New York World.

A Distinct Decline.

Mrs. B.—The Browning cult has rather subsided in your city, has it not?

Mrs. L. (from Chicago)—Yes, indeed! Now that we have got on to his curves it is scarcely an exaggeration to say that Browning is already in the soup.—Life.

Left.

The ardent lover had just asked her to be his bride, for she had given him cause to hope, and she had answered simply: "Yes, George, if you can get papa's consent."

"I will," he answered, passionately. "Where is he? He shall give his consent. I would seek the utmost heights of heaven or the darkest depths of hades to get it!" he cried.

"I guess you'll have to, George," she answered, quietly; "pa's dead."

And, with an awful realization that all was over, George went home, and, putting on his little brother's copper toed boots, kicked himself.—Harvard Lampoon.

Too Thin.

My son, now and then you will come across a news item in the paper, which begins something this way: "During the summer of 18— I was crossing the ocean in the steamer —— of the —— line, when a young officer, since married to the daughter of a well known merchant of this city," etc. Don't read it. Read a patent medicine advertisement, rather. There will be quite as much information and about 500 times more truth in the ad. than in the narrative that spells the very things you most want to know in meaningless blanks and dashes.—Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.

Her Mistress Was Out.

A lady on Mount Vernon street told her newly acquired Irish maid the other day to say she was not at home in case any one called. One visitor did come, and she is responsible for the story.

"Is Mrs. Blank in?" she said, when the door was opened in response to her ring.

"No, ma'am," replied Bridget, stoutly. "She's not at home, and may God forgive the awful lie I'm tellin' ye."

Whereupon she slammed the door in the visitor's face, and that was the end of it.—Chicago Tribune.

Wasted Opportunities.

A correspondent writes: "Do you ever engage men to write poems for your paper?" We have not for some years had a regular, permanent poet attached to the staff. We have, however, made a standing offer to print unobjectionable poems at the rate of fifty cents per line, nonpareil. The fact that but little advantage has been taken of this offer leads us to believe that there is not much hope of building up a poetic literature in this country.—Toronto Globe.

He Took the Hint.

"Yes, Jennie," said the young lady's beau as he clasped her small hand in his and gazed lovingly into her melting eyes, "although I'm in comfortable circumstances now, I've seen the day when I've been hard pressed."

"Indeed?" she said.

"Yes, indeed, pretty hard pressed."

"I don't remember," she said with a shy look, "of ever having been hard pressed."

She was a moment after.—Boston Courier.

"Don't get discouraged, my boy. Why, if you keep on this way the first thing you know you will be as big a man as Anson."—Chicago Herald.

Better Hurry Up.

Mr. Highlive (looking up from the paper)—Well, well! Wonders will never cease! They've got so now that they can photograph in colors.

Mrs. Highlive (glancing at his nose)—I think, my dear, you'd better get your picture taken before the old process is abandoned.—New York Weekly.

Clothing a Ship in Steel.

Two or three months or less after the completion of the fairing the ship is probably in frame and looks like the skeleton of some Brobdignagian monster that has stranded on the bank of the river. The ribs have been hoisted into position at right angles with the keel, and strung together by rib bands, and already there are signs of the coming subdivision by decks and bulkheads of the hollow space within. You can still see through her, however; she is like, to make yet another comparison, a great oblong wicker basket, the supple willows being represented by the network of steel. The next step is the clothing of ribs with plates.

As they reach the yard the plates are square and flat, but they are passed through rollers of various kinds, from which they issue in any shape desired—hollowed like a spoon, curved lengthwise or breadthwise or diagonally, as the contour of the ship may call for. A steam or hydraulic plane smooths them down as though they were the softest of white wood; another machine trims the edges as easily as a woman cuts silk with a pair of scissors. Then, suspended by iron chains, they are thrust between the jaws of a punching machine, which has resemblance to a sinister human face with a flat nose, a long upper lip and a small chin. The jaws close upon them and bite out, ten at a time, the holes for the rivets by which they are to be fastened to the frame.—Scribner's.

The Congressional Record.

The several thousand non paying and half dozen paying subscribers to that especial journal, The Congressional Record, now miss its neatly cut and bound pages from their morning mail. It is noteworthy that up to its dying day The Congressional Record was full of speeches, some of which were "delivered" in senate or house two months before, and "held for revision." The veteran statesman nearly always lets his remarks go in the manner in which they are caught by the official stenographer; the amateur statesman not only wants to revise his speeches, but to read the proof before The Record is put to press. Senator Cullom often laughs at the rather ridiculous zeal displayed by himself when he was a member of the freshman class in the house. That was just twenty-four years ago. The then Representative Cullom had made a big speech on the polygamy question, and he determined to see that speech to press. At the old Globe office he was told the proof would be ready at 1 o'clock in the morning. At 2 o'clock he was told he would have to wait until 3, and at 3 his pulse quickened as the proof of his first congressional speech was placed in his hands. He spent a half hour over the proof and was unable to find any errors, typographical or others. The foreman was calling loudly for the proof so the forms could be put on the press, and the young congressman was determined to find an error of some sort to repay him for his all night vigil. Finally, in a moment of desperation, he struck out a whole sentence and crawled off to bed. Rising about noon he eagerly grasped The Globe, and with humiliation discovered that the only blemish on the composition of the speech was the unhappy omission of that sentence, whose absence left a number of other sentences well nigh meaningless. Since that night Mr. Cullom has not bothered the government printer to send him proofs of his speeches.—Walter Wellman.

TESTIMONIALS WORTHY OF CONFIDENCE.

For over twenty years I have been a great sufferer from the effects of a diseased stomach, and for three years past have been unable to do any business—hardly able to move about. Two years ago my case was pronounced by the best medical skill incurable. I visited different water cures and tried different climates, but to no good. Last June I began using Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup and at once began to feel better. I have used thirteen bottles, and am a well man.

HISTORIC NORWICH TOWN.

A GROUP OF BUILDINGS MORE THAN TWO CENTURIES OLD.

Substantial Dwellings That Were Old Before the Revolution—House in Which Benedict Arnold Learned to Be a Druggist—John Trott's Cider "Flips."

While there are several neglected and isolated houses scattered throughout various parts of Connecticut of greater age than any in Norwich, probably nowhere else in this country is to be found such a group of ancient dwellings as that in this old town. The famous stone house of Guilford, which was a fortress in Indian times and the history of which runs back to 1639, is only twenty years older than some of this group. They all stand in historic Norwich Town, which a century or more ago was the town proper, and when the present site of the city was known as "The Landing." Indians held possession of the river in those days, and kept the white settlers away. Here generation after generation of families have been reared, and the houses remain now almost as they did then. The people here have cared more to keep their possessions intact than to have modern improvements, until Norwich is pre-eminently the banner historical city of New England.

THE BLISS MANSION.

Passing up the two aristocratic thoroughfares of the city, Broadway and Washington street, to the "plains" and out upon the old road, the change is most remarkable. Fashionable domiciles give way to ancient looking rookeries, whose weather beaten sides are marked with time. The first and most famous of these old dwellings is the Bliss house, a substantial two story mansion, which stands squarely on the main road to the old town. It is the oldest house in New London county, having been built in 1659 by Thomas Bliss, one of the original settlers of Norwich. It was, without doubt, the first dwelling built in eastern Connecticut. The first town clerk had his office in this house for years. From the time of its erection, 230 years ago, the old house remained in the uninterrupted ownership of the Bliss family until a few years ago, when it was sold to Mr. Angel Stead, the present owner.

A few rods south of this old family mansion stands another ancient building, an old, angular, unpainted, gambrel roofed structure, which is now used as a dwelling by a very old lady. This little building was erected long before the revolution for the purpose of weaving stockings in. The sign which for years hung over the door represented an unsymmetrical leg clothed in a gaudy stocking. But this industry was evidently unprofitable, and it was succeeded by a newspaper, the first in Connecticut. Separated from this building by a narrow lane is the Reynolds homestead, and above the front door are scrolled the figures 1659, representing the year in which it was built. This house has remained in the Reynolds family since the land was set aside for them, and is now occupied by the family of the late Henry L. Reynolds.

Diagonally across the street from the Bliss place, partially hidden by shrubs and trees, is a brown two story dwelling known as the Thomas Leffingwell house. It is fully 200 years old. The old stone chimney, which is twelve feet square at its base, and the stones of which were laid in clay instead of mortar, the material that is used in the construction of walls today, still performs its service.

THE OLD DRUG STORE.

Above this place is another but more unpretentious house, also once the property of the Leffingwells. It is, if anything, a trifle older than the former and much smaller. The Leffingwells were a big family and very prominent in early history. Col. Christopher Leffingwell's massive mansion is next in order. The colonel was methodically correct, and the house stands due north and south, one angle of its frame protruding partially out into the road. Col. Leffingwell was the first postmaster of the old town, operated the first paper mill in eastern Connecticut, and carried on various other industries.

These six places are all within a radius of fifteen rods, while some fifty rods further on another line of ancient dwellings is approached. First comes the residence of Mrs. Laura Thurston and Mr. Henry McNelly, which was the home of Dr. Joshua Lathrop long before the revolution. Directly opposite is the dwelling of the family of the late William C. Gilman, which was occupied by Dr. Daniel Lathrop at the same time that Joshua occupied the other. These brothers kept the first drug store which was opened between Hartford and Boston. Their old store was in existence until two years ago and was popularly known as the "Benedict Arnold drug store," because within it Arnold was trained to be a druggist. Just above these two places stands an immense, gambrel roofed, venerable looking two story structure which was the residence of Gen. Jabez Huntington prior to and during the revolution.

The house is on land that was deeded to ancestors of Gen. Huntington by the Indians, and the mansion has been in the hands of the Huntington family for two centuries. The general and all his sons were prominent in the revolutionary war. Nearly opposite the Huntington place is another old house, built for Governor Samuel Huntington.

Surrounding Norwich town green is an endless chain of these venerable mansions, all 200 or more years old. One of the most notable is the old Trott place, which was occupied by John Trott as a tavern prior to and during the revolutionary war, and where Gens. Washington and Lafayette and others often drank his famous cider "flips." The Tracy house, too, is quite conspicuous and quite well preserved, as are also the Sylvanus Jones and the Lathrop places.—Cor. New York Times.

It has just been found out that common nutmeg is a powerful narcotic poison, but as one must eat several before it becomes dangerous, careful cooks need not banish the flavor.

ABOUT FINGER RINGS.

Something About the Customs of the Past and Present in Their Use.

The famous Dr. John Thomas, bishop of Lincoln in 1753, married three times. On the occasion of his fourth espousal, he put this motto on his posy ring:

If I survive
I'll make them five.

History does not tell us whether the fourth Mrs. Thomas approved the sentiment, nor whether the much marrying bishop lived to carry it out.

The motto rings of today are patterns of the posy rings of several centuries ago. The inscriptions are, of course, more modern, but the sentiment remains the same. Of late society has gone back to the real old English posy, and the hands of our American belles are being adorned with rings that carry the same mottoes that graced them in King Hal's time.

There used to be a custom in Rome which made the bridegroom send the bride before marriage a ring of iron to show how lasting the union ought to be, and the frugality they were to observe together; but by and by luxury crept in, and the iron ring was exchanged for one of gold, which change doubtless delighted the Roman ladies.

Numerous superstitions are connected with the ring. The English and French ladies of the times of the Crusades slept with their pillows while their lords and lovers were away fighting the infidel. The custom was supposed to produce pleasant dreams of the absent ones, and the rings were believed to be talismans of safety. The Scotch lass who looks through her betrothal ring three times on the night before her marriage is sure to see visions of the happiness in store for her, and the Greek girl who finds a ring will marry before the year is out.

The women of the uncivilized countries adorn their fingers with clumsy rings of bone and metal. Not satisfied with this, they wear rings in their ears and through the nose. Gypsy women are fond of rings, some of which they claim possess magical powers.

Of course there is nothing in the so called invisible rings. We are told that the famous circlet of Gyges rendered the wearer invisible when the stone was turned inward, and that the ring which Otnit, king of Lombardy, received from the queen's mother, always directed the owner the right road to take in traveling. There is a legend that a knight's daughter once found one of these invisible rings on the day before her wedding. Charmed with the beauty of it, she put it on and wore it to the altar. After the ceremony she happened to turn the stone inward, when lo! the prince saw her vanish, as it were, and rushing from the palace he was about to throw himself into the sea, when he was checked by the bride discarding the ring and calling him by name.

The custom of wearing locks of hair or pictures in rings has gone out of style. The poisoned ring is no longer made, for we have got beyond the days of the Borgias and the Medicis. It is generally believed that Hannibal killed himself with poison which he had long carried in a ring made for that purpose, and Demosthenes is said to have worn a poison circlet.

The true romance of the ring is connected with the engagement and wedding fingers. My lady wears the one with anticipation and the other with pride. As long as the world stands the hoop of gold will possess a significance which no other personal ornament can have.—T. C. Harbaugh in Pittsburg Bulletin.

Washington's Jump.

A story is told of Washington making a famous jump for a wife during his youth. "He was riding, so the story goes, along the Potomac above Georgetown, when he came to the house of a large estate, and seeing a crowd on the lawn, he asked the cause of the gathering. He was told that a jumping match was in progress, and the prize was the hand of the farmer's daughter. He looked on for a time at the different jumps, and finally asked if he might not also try his skill. The host consented, and Washington jumped farther than the farthest. As he did so he noted that the countenance of the maiden fell, and that she looked rather woefully at the face of his leading competitor, who had made the next best jump, and who was evidently her lover. He resigned his claim to the lady's hand in his rival's favor, and it is said that this lady afterward recalled the circumstance when she met him at one of his presidential levees."—Cosmopolitan.

Making Out a Prima Facie Case.

Here is a yarn about the incorrigible small boy which I heard yesterday. An Albany woman was telling a Binghamton woman, who was visiting in this city, of the rapidity with which rents were shooting skyward in Albany. The Binghamton woman, after listening awhile, began to tell of the Binghamton rents. Then her small son interrupted her, just as she had finished telling what she paid per month in Binghamton, by remarking: "Why, that wasn't for a month, mamma; that was for a day." Both the women laughed at the boy's idea, but the little fellow kept right on and paralyzed his mother by adding: "It must have been for a day, any way, because the man used to come every day for the rent." Reports sayeth that the the Binghamton woman collapsed.—Albany Express.

One Way to Clear the Score.

Two gentlemen were walking on F street recently when one said:

"Let's cross the street. There comes a man to whom I owe some money, and I don't want to meet him."

"Does he dun you?"

"No; that's the worst of it. He never speaks of it."

After they had crossed over, the debtor walked some distance in thoughtful silence. Then he said, seriously:

"I wish that man would get mad about it and go at me with a club. I can't pay him the money, and I wish he would thrash me like fury and settle the matter so that I wouldn't ever be afraid again to meet him."—Washington Post.

PHOSPHORESCENCE.

THE LIGHT WHICH ILLUMINES WITHOUT CREATING HEAT.

The Glowing Inhabitants of the Sea—The Fatal Gleam of Mackerel—The Fireflies of South America and the "Lightning Bug" of the Northern Section.

There is no subject which the researches of scientists have more completely failed to elucidate than that of the cause of animal, mineral and vegetable phosphorescence—the light which, unlike all other lights, illumines without either consuming or giving out any perceptible heat. The ocean is the great storehouse of phosphorescent light. On its surface myriads of noctilucæ (little creatures just visible to the naked eye) are often seen lighting the waves for miles, and presenting wonderful effects when the water is broken by the bow of a ship or the oars of a boat. Persons who have passed through a stretch of water crowded with noctilucæ say that the light they give dims that of the stars, and makes the sea look as though it were a vast heaving mass of metal at white heat.

The intensity of the light is explained by the immense quantity of the little animals, which are computed to number thirty thousand or so to the cubic foot. Bathers in waters where they abound have often been amazed to find, on emerging, that their bodies are rendered luminous by the noctilucæ that cling to them.

A kind of sea slug that is met with in the Mediterranean and the Pacific emits light from certain spots in the body. It is capable of being kept in an aquarium, and there are usually some specimens in the famous one at Naples. When disturbed or swimming the light makes it look like a flame in the water.

PYROSOMÆ.

The most splendid of the many luminous inhabitants of the sea are the pyrosomæ. At night they look as though made of glowing white hot iron; diffusing so strong a light that other fishes are rendered visible when they happen to swim within the sphere of their radiance.

A distinguishing feature of the pyrosoma is the variety of tints that it gives forth—orange, green, azure, blue, white, and various shades of dark red having been all noticed by various observers. A tiny kind of shark that is met with off the shores of the southern states of America is a noted light giver. Specimens captured and taken into a dark apartment present an extraordinary spectacle. The entire surface of the head and body emits a greenish gleam that is constant, and is not, as in the case of most of these luminous inhabitants of the sea, increased by friction and agitation.

The smallness of the fins of this fish show that it is not an active swimmer, and the assumption is that its light is useful in attracting its prey, on the principle of the torches used by many savages in fishing. Several kinds of crabs are luminous. One named the sapphirina is noted for the intensely vivid character of the light that proceeds from it. So brilliant is it that it does not need darkness to make its presence known, but corruscates blue, purple, green, gold and sapphire rays in full daylight. The presence of a school of mackerel is often indicated by the phosphorescent gleam which these fish produce. Fishermen often descry them at a great distance by this light, and hasten to surround them by their nets. It is thought that mackerel make a secretion which gives the light, as after they are captured a gleaming fluid is noticed running off their bodies, and sometimes covering the hands of the men who toss them from the boat.

FIREFLIES.

It has been urged that the poet was guilty of an exaggeration in describing the fireflies as giving sufficient light to be of any service, but the accounts of travelers in South America, who tell us that the natives light their path while journeying by a couple of these insects tied to their feet, show that he was speaking quite within the bounds of possibility. At evening entertainments in that part of the world it is customary for ladies to decorate their hair and dresses with fireflies, confined by delicate silken threads.

The natives of Vera Cruz do quite a large trade in fireflies, which they catch by waving a blazing coal at the end of a stick. The insects fly toward the light, and are captured in nets. The fireflies of Northern America differ from those just described in the fact that they emit their light in capricious flashes, instead of with a steady, uniform glow. This peculiarity has gained for them the name of "lightning bugs." Their light is very similar to that of our glowworm. A story is told of some French peasants who were returning home one night and saw a meteor fall through the sky in front of them; about half a mile further on they came to a glowing mass in a ditch and rushed away terrified, declaring that a star had fallen upon the earth and was burning it up. On investigation it was found that this burning star was nothing more uncanny than a mass of frogs' eggs that had developed phosphorescence.

Several varieties of the vegetable kingdom are luminous in a greater or less degree. One of the fungi, which is not at all uncommon on the walls of damp, dark mines, caverns, etc., occasionally emits sufficient light to admit of the reading of ordinary print by it. The emission of light from the common potato when in a state of decomposition is sometimes very striking. Several of the Indian plants and grasses are also luminous, and it is said that in 1815 the mountains near Syree were nightly illuminated by their means. The root stock of a plant from the Ooraghum jungle, supposed to be an orchid, possesses the peculiar property of becoming luminous when wetted, while, when dry, it is quite lusterless. The hairy red poppy, the nasturtium and the double marigold are also luminous to a certain degree.—London Standard.

LONG LIFE

There is nothing in the world more generally desired than long life, yet the majority of people put off caring for their health—not because they are really careless, but because we live our lives at such a pace we have not time to give the subject sufficient thought until we receive a reminder in the shape of a severe illness.

Then, too, we are constantly bewildered by the various schools of medicine, and the physicians who represent them, and often blunder in our choice of a doctor.

If people only knew that the very best health-keeper, life-preserver, and disease-preventer that has yet been discovered, is simmered down into a concentrated and very palatable form in the shape of New Style Pleasant Taste Vinegar Bitters, they would not hesitate a moment to try it.

But they do not know. How can they know, when so many not only worthless, but positively injurious drugs are constantly flooding the market under various names guises, that the New Style Vinegar Bitters is as bad as any of them?

They do not know, of course, unless they have the courage to try the New Style. It straightens out a tangled-up system in a very short while, and those who buy it once buy it always.

Why don't you try it, reader? It is sent out by a responsible house, and is exactly as represented. It costs but a dollar for a very large bottle. Try it once and you will never be so glad of anything in your life. Your druggist may not have it, but he will order it for you. Be sure it says New Style Pleasant Taste on carton and bottle before you take it. Try it, and you will feel happier than if you had found a gold mine, for it really is a mine—of health.

JOSEPH F. LINDSAY

The Veteran Manufacturer Passes Suddenly and Quietly to His Reward.

Joseph F. Lindsay, the veteran carriage and wagon manufacturer died very suddenly at nine o'clock this morning, passing quietly and peacefully to rest in his room at his shop building, on East street. For several days Mr. Lindsay had been complaining, but was up and around, and attending to his usual labors. Only this morning he called about 8.30 at the office of Dr. Harding and asked for a plaster for his back and then returned to his room. Within fifteen minutes he expired, dying without perceptible pain, just as one would fall asleep. Mr. Lindsay had no relatives here but he was surrounded by his shop companions, who would gladly and quickly have rendered any possible aid. His funeral will likely be conducted under the charge of the Presbyterian church, of which organization he has been long an honored member.

The deceased was born in Blair Co., Pa., in 1816. He first came to Marion in 1851, but did not make this his permanent home in 1858, and has ever since engaged in the manufacture of wagons and carriages. He was never married, and his nearest relatives are brothers residing at Mansfield.

A Call Upon Mrs. Brownlow.

KNOXVILLE, May 17.—We find it difficult to leave this delightful country, so full of memories and interesting places. Perhaps no other city in all the south possesses so many attractions as does Knoxville.

We were to call on Madame Brownlow on Thursday and, feeling impressed with the dignity and honor of the occasion, donned our best attire and looked our best—or tried to. We found ourselves in the extreme eastern part of the city, in what is known as Old Knoxville. The streets are narrow and hemmed in on either side by tall, quaint old buildings with broad, wide galleries, and with massive brick chimneys built on the outside, rising like giant sentinels on guard. The home of Mme. Brownlow is one of the oldest on the street and is reached by climbing a steep staircase leading directly from the pavement. We were met at the door by a trim, yellow turbaned mulatto girl, who ushered us into the cool, dark parlor and seated us in the prim, high backed chairs with which the room was furnished. The entire furnishings of the house gave evidence of the quaint yet elegant style of fifty years ago. We had to wait some time before the lady made her appearance, and we amused ourselves with the pictures that lay in profusion on the quaintly carved center table. An ancient piano stood in one corner, over which hung a life sized portrait of Gov. Brownlow, a most excellent likeness. A rustle in the hall announced the coming of the lady we were so anxious to meet, and we rose to greet her. We were hardly prepared to see one so young in appearence she did not look more than fifty, tall, stately, with an elegance of manner betokening her association with nobility. She came forward and gave us as warm a welcome as though we were not the entire strangers that we were. She has clear cut, rather Roman, features, dark eyes that light up the face wonderfully in conversations. Her hair was plainly dressed and the dark, shining bands scarcely showed a line of silver. Her powers as a conversationalist are almost unlimited, and she gave us great pleasure in many personal reminiscences of her illustrious husband and sons. We were shown a staircase where Mrs. Hale, the daughter now a widow and who lives with her mother, stood with the stars and stripes in her hands and defied the rebel troops who were passing, daring them to lift a hand towards its destruction. One of her sons, James we think she said, is now in Washington in the post-office department. We spent an hour very pleasantly and took leave of our distinguished hostess feeling ourselves honored with the courtesy shown us.

Thursday evening at 6.30 we took the Knoxville and Ohio train for Keithley Junction, where we made immediate connections with the Cincinnati Southern for the north and Friday at noon, tired and dusty, we sighted the familiar towers and turrets of our own city and were again—at home.

Equal Suffrage Symposium.

Franchise beautiful word signifying liberty, freedom, the birthright of native born American citizens, freedom to worship God, to erect family alters, to teach our children the first principles of republican institutions, the equal rights of citizens; that all just governments derive their power from the consent of the governed, a truth never disputed in this country until applied to woman.

Franchise, "to be made free!" Charles Sumner when speaking of woman's suffrage, referred to the phrase "Consent of the governed" and said "I have always used these words in my speeches because they declare the one foundation principle of our government and there is no getting away from it." Macaulay wrote, "We say that every argument which tells us of universal suffrage of males, tells equally in favor of female suffrage."

"I go for all sharing the priveleges of the government who assist in bearing its burdens, by no means excluding women," said Abraham Lincoln. "Voting would increase the intelligence of women, and be a powerful stimulus to female education. It would enable women, to protect their own industrial social, moral and educational rights. * * * * I believe that this reform is coming and that it will come to stay. God grant that our fashionable society may have the wisdom to ride in the chariot and not be dragged at its wheels," says Joseph Cook.

"A man could not argue against woman suffrage five minutes without repudiating the principles upon which this government is founded."—U. S. Senator Hoar.

"It is a very cheap wit that finds it so droll, that a woman should vote."—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

"Every one who wishes and works for a purer civilization is on your side. Every one who longs for the permanency of republican institutions is on your side."—Wendell Phillips.

"It is the great question of today, as emancipation was twenty five years ago, the interests of the temperance reform are deeply in it." President Elliott.

"In view of the terrible corruption of our politics, people ask, can we maintain universal suffrage? I say no, not without the aid of wisdom."—Bishop Gilbert Haven.

"Justice is on the side of woman suffrage."—William H. Seward.

"The great vices of our cities will never be conquered until the ballot is put into the hands of women."—Bishop Simpson.

"The State can no more afford to dispense with the aid of women in its affairs than can the family."—Harriet Beecher Stowe.

The W. C. T. U. cordially invites, especially all who differ, to come and hear Miss Shaw next Friday evening, at 8 p. m., in the M. E. church.

Western Wools.

Western wools, according to Western Rural, grow in popularity. There is not such immense profit in wool growing in Washington and Montana territories as there once was, because the flocks require more care, but with that care comes a much better quality of wool and higher prices. Montana wool ranks very much higher than it used to, and Montana is a great sheep country. The increase of sheep in the territory has been steady right along and the number will continue to increase because the conditions of sheep raising and wool growing are so favorable. If wool growing could be conducted in the haphazard way in which it was once done in the territories more money could be made for a time, but in the long run better wool will bring the most profit. As land grows more valuable in the new sections, of course there is less profit in wool. At present in this country the greatest profits from wool growing are made in Texas and the territories; and though the profits will grow somewhat less, the territories will always be splendid sheep sections.
